Our calendar is always tentative at this point in the semester, and students should not make long-term plans counting on it to remain the same. We have a very strict attendance policy on the Rome Campus and students are not excused from classes for travel, so they should not buy train tickets, airline tickets, or make travel commitments until the calendar is confirmed, shortly before their arrival in January.

That said:

- (a) while tentative, the calendar is not likely to change in any dramatic way (but it could);
- (b) when/if it changes, one reason will be changes in the world situation that affect our programs;
- (c) a second reason of change could be academics; our highest priority is academics, and if we need to change the calendar for academic purposes, we will do so;
- (d) a third and final reason for change could be local conditions: Italy and Greece (the primary locations of our programs) are full of surprises, such as wide fluctuations in prices, strikes, etc; if we are forced to change our calendar for these reasons, we will do so.
